It's essentially the inheritance of the will of John Fell, D.D. who died on 10 July 1686, aged 61, Bishop of Oxford and Dean of Christ Church. Since 1668 he spent his life creating a 'learned press' in Oxford, endowed with invaluable equipment, setting a high standard for the future of his publishing. He wrote: "The foundation of all success must be laid in doing things well, and I am sure that will not be done with English letters" (to Jenkins, 2 Dec. 1672). So he collected types available in the foreign market: mainly France, Holland and Germany. Fell decided to develop types in its own 'workhouse' too. Peter De Walpergen became his personal type-founder. Says Harry Carter in "THE FELL TYPES. What has been done in and about them" (Oxford University Press, New York, 1968): "He was born at Frankfurt am Main, descended from a Protestant family, and left for England to study at the
